

The End of Poverty?

Over the weekend I watched "The End of Poverty ." This film has been in just about all of the previews of other new documentaries that I've watched so I thought it had to be a good one. The preview (see below) does grab your attention, but after watching it, I have mixed feelings about it. We all know that poverty exists and there are some individual choices we can make to help those in need, but I don't see how we can completely reorganize our entire country to help poorer countries. Would the sum of all individuals make a collective decision to consume less and conserve more energy? That seems to be the rhetorical question that the film is asking. The answer lies with us.

Posted by Burl C. on February 21, 2011

Blogs:

Sights and Sounds

Information, Answers & Reviews

Reviews Titles:

The end of poverty? [videorecording]

Links

[1] <https://mcpl.info/blog/movies-and-music/end-poverty>

[2] <https://mcpl.info/resources/in.us/view.aspx?cr=059011>

[3] <https://mcpl.info/movies/music/blog>

[4] <https://mcpl.info/categories/blog/information-answers-reviews>

[5] <https://mcpl.info/reviews/68ca1201>