

Catfish [videorecording]

Catfish

Wow! This will most likely win an Oscar and probably be the best documentary film of 2011. And no, this is not a documentary about fishing. It's too difficult to describe it without giving away the ending. Even if I describe how it starts, you'll already be lead to think about what the conclusion will be.

What I can say is this: I'm what they call "old school." That's slang for being at least fifteen years behind the times and usually on purpose. I don't have a Facebook account and I don't participate in online dating because I value face-to-face communication above all else followed by Alexander Graham Bell's old fashion telephone. Having said that, you could imagine what a shocker this was to me if you've already seen Catfish. I'm still in shock and will have to watch it again because I'm having trouble believing that it is true. This is the story of one guy's adventure in dating and finding love through a popularly used website called Facebook. See the trailer below to get an idea of what to expect.

Posted by Burl C. on March 21, 2011

Blogs:

Sights and Sounds

Information, Answers & Reviews

Reviews Subjects:

Documentary Films

Reviews Titles:

Catfish [videorecording]
