Fowler, Therese Anne - Z: a Novel of Zelda Fitzgerald

This novel focuses on the life of Zelda: dancer, writer, and famous flapper who married Scott Fitzgerald. The Fitzgeralds were considered the couple of the twenties. Zelda and Scott spent time in Paris in the same social circle as Hemingway and his wife where the hard-drinking and romances took a toll on both marriages. If you've read about Zelda in Scott's or her own writing, this fascinating, multi-talented person will intrigue you.

Hart, Lenore - The Raven's Bride

If you love Edgar Allen Poe's famous poem "Annabel Lee", this novel about Poe's doomed wife and first cousin, Virginia, will interest you. The Poes married when Virginia was thirteen and E.A. was twenty-seven; her mother signed a document that she was of age. Like Hemingway, Poe was a big drinker, and Virginia had to put up with drunkenness and poverty. Another story of a literary marriage where the wife was both muse and care-giver.

Hemingway, Ernest - The Sun Also Rises

This is often considered the most famous novel of the "Lost Generation", that crowd of artists, musicians, and writers who left the U.S. during the 20s to live an expat lifestyle in Paris and other cities. Jake Barnes, a jaded WWI vet, travelled from the bars of Paris to Spain for the spring bullfights. Hemingway describes the expatriate lifestyle amid the violence, camaraderie, and life and death risk for bulls and men.

Horan, Nancy - Loving Frank: a Novel

Instead of married couples, this historical novel focuses on an unmarried pair of lovers, Frank Lloyd Wright and Mamah Cheney, who scandalized Chicago when they deserted their respective spouses (and children) for each other. Blending fact and fiction, Horan shows how the famous architect was inspired by his mistress and how they created a home together despite society's hostility toward them.

Robuck, Erika -- Hemingway's Girl

Mar  iella Bennet loves the sea and dreams of starting a charter boat business with her dad. But after her father is suddenly murdered in Key West, Florida during the Great Depression, Ernest Hemingway enters her life. Their lives become interconnected in surprising ways. A massive hurricane heads toward Key West and Marielle must quickly choose her life path.

Taylor, Kendall - Sometimes Madness is Wisdom: Zelda and Scott Fitzgerald

This joint biography examines the lives and marriage of this beautiful couple - both were blonde, gifted, beautiful and selfish. They were friends of the Hemingways and their Paris years were also volatile. Scott did all that he could to prevent his talented wife from writing books also.

Another look at two Americans in Paris during the twenties.

Vreeland, Susan - Clara and Mr. Tiffany

Louis Comfort Tiffany's stained glass windows were the hit of the 1893 Chicago World's Fair, yet many of his designs were inspired by Clara Driscoll's work--she headed his Women's Division. She also became romantically involved with several men, including Mr. Tiffany, but his policy was not to employ married women. This novel explores their relationship and their lives as artists in New York during the Gilded Age.
