

A river of waste [videorecording] : the hazardous truth about factory farms

A river of waste.

There have been a number of food and "food production" documentaries out within the last two years with the most popular one being Food Inc.. Last night I saw another good one called, A river of waste.

This deals more with the pollutants produced in the poultry industry such as chicken litter, arsenic, antibiotics and growth hormones. For the most part, we believe that these substances are contained within the facilities in which they are being produced but this documentary exposes that idea as false. See the trailer below to see if you're interested.

Posted by Burl C. on February 17, 2011

Blogs:

Sights and Sounds

Information, Answers & Reviews

Reviews Titles:

A river of waste [videorecording] : the hazardous truth about factory farms
